When I do a find() on the model passed in, the model is already a Backbone.Model so I convert it to an Array to manipulate it. The code that isn't working is: // Fails with this error console.log(model.get("privateOrder")); console.log(model.attributes.privateOrder); model.attributes.privateOrder = $.map(model.attributes.privateOrder, function (value, index, arr) { return value; }); console.log(model.attributes.privateOrder); The output is: undefined [1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10] [1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8

I have a php script that outputs strings such as 'MM-DD-YYYY' like this: echo '12-13-2012'; I want to convert this output to a date object. I can do this using the date() function, but I don't know how to take advantage of the date function to automatically create a date from these strings. This is the code I'm using right now: $output = '12-13-2012'; $output = strtotime($output); $output = date('Y-md', $output); echo $output; Is there a more efficient way to do this without creating an array and looping through all the output strings? A: Use DateTime::createFromFormat() A: This should work for you: $output = '12-13-2012'; $output = DateTime::createFromFormat('m-d-Y', $output); Note: Don't forget that the d won't format the date correctly with values greater than 31st December (11th January on the next years) /* Copyright The Kubermet
