Q: ASP.NET 4.5, MVC 4 and Entity Framework I've built an application using Visual Studio 2010, ASP.NET 4.5, MVC 4, and Entity Framework. I would like to upgrade to .NET 4.5 and MVC 4, but am struggling to figure out the best way to do this. I would like to retain the Entity Framework that is already built in, and my controllers. I was wondering if there is a recommended path for creating a new project using .NET 4.5? Or should I simply add in the Entity Framework code to an existing project? A: There are a lot of possible solutions: If you already have an application with EF and have used the Code First Migrations, you can simply install "asp.net 4.5", that contains the new EF version (currently 6.1.3), and the code-first migration project. If you have a new project, you can run the asp.net "generator" (right click on the project in the Solution Explorer and select "Add > New Project"), the setup will ask you to choose the version of .NET. In your case select "ASP.NET Web Application (Model View Controller)". You can also manually add the new project to a solution. Once installed, it is quite straightforward to add the new project to your existing solution. That being said, I recommend to try the first solution, or at least the second one, as the first one should be easier (and more fast) to work with (I mean, you don't have the default EF project installed, so you won't have to manually add it to your solution as well). ![(brjcancer00046-0028.tif "scanned-page"){.216} ![(brjcancer00046-0029.tif "scanned-page"){.217} ![(brjcancer00046-0030.tif "scanned-page"){.218} ![(brjcancer00046-0031.tif "scanned-page"){.219} !

Beto O'Rourke, long seen as a long-shot contender to oust Republican Sen. Ted Cruz in November, appeared on the presidential campaign trail Sunday, saying that Cruz's vote in favor of the confirmation of now Supreme Court Justice Brett Kavanaugh could be his political undoing. "Can you say this is your year?" a skeptical ABC News reporter asked O'Rourke at a rally in the capital city of Texas, urging the presidential candidate to "get serious" about his campaign. "I'm ready to get into it," replied O'Rourke, who ran unsuccessfully for the Senate in 2018. "We have so many very, very good races in this country. People are sick of the same old politics and tired of the same old rhetoric. And they deserve better. We deserve better. And we're gonna get better." Earlier in the day, O'Rourke said, he'd spoken to a friend who suggested he take a meeting with the U.S. Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, after the chamber endorsed O'Rourke's opponent in the Senate race. "I've got no patience for the status quo," he said, explaining why he hadn't asked the chamber for its endorsement. "That's what I said to the friend: 'Don't you think that's something that I should do, given who I am and my values?' He said, 'You've got some real thinking to do.' And that's what I'm doing." A McConnell endorsement by the chamber, O'Rourke noted, would not have made a difference in the race. Asked by an attendee at the rally about the campaign of former Vice President Joe Biden, another 2020 presidential contender, O'Rourke said, "I love Joe Biden." He said Biden had achieved several goals in the Senate, including advocating for an impeachment inquiry into President Donald Trump. "It gives us hope and motivation to really think about what we can do to make
